

THE POWER OF FOX!

Diminutive and cuddly Michael, who plays Marty McFly in Back To The Future, is winning fans on and off movie sets

EVEN Doctor Emmett Brown's time-travelling DeLorean sportscar would have trouble keeping up with the dashing Michael J. Fox.

The success of Back To The Future has blasted Fox well and truly into the superstar category. And there seems no sign of his meteoric rise to fame and fortune abating.

His latest film is a low-budget horror spoof called Teen Wolf, made shortly before Back To The Future.

And it's already shaping as another major international hit, having broken a number of box-office records in America.

It's a remarkable change in fortune for Michael, considering that just over two years ago he was close to starving in Hollywood.

Family Ties changed all that, and Back To The Future has ensured that he's well insulated from the likelihood of revisiting poverty.

These days he's the most in-demand young actor in town, not only because of his talent but also because he's genuinely likeable, with a self-effacing style and down-to-earth manner.

But most of all, it is his sense of humor, on and off the screen, that sets him apart from most of the serious young men currently making waves in Hollywood.

Win a Super VideoMovie outfit

It's so up to date that Marty McFly used it in Back To The Future

TO celebrate the success of Back To The Future, TV WEEK along with JVC and United International Pictures (UIP) have put together a fantastic competition.

There are hundreds of prizes to be won, including Back To The Future watches, posters, books and soundtrack albums.

But the major prize is a beauty.

It's a magnificent JVC VideoMovie outfit, valued at around $3500, and exactly the same as the unit used in Back To The Future by Marty McFly to record the first incredible journey through time by Doctor Brown's souped-up DeLorean car.

The JVC VideoMovie is almost as amazing as the time machine!

It's a completely self-contained VHS video unit that's light, compact and easy to use. It features built-in microphone, zoom lens, through-the-lens viewfinder, low-light capabilities, built-in battery and more.

The VideoMovie utilises JVC's compact VHS video tapes, which give a full 30 minutes of recording time.

The VideoMovie comes complete with battery charger, direct TV connection unit (you can use the VideoMovie to record and play back), a motorised VHS adaptor, dubbing cable, shoulder frame, straps and handle — and a protective, hard plastic carry case to hold it all.

OK, so that's the first prize.

There are over 1000 consolation prizes to be won — 500 digital display Back To The Future watches, 500 big full-color posters, 20 soundtrack albums, and 50 official collector's edition Back To The Future magazines, which contain a Michael J. Fox poster.

To be in the running for one of these fantastic prizes, all you have to do is complete the coupon (right) and send it off to the address shown.

The entry judged neatest and most correct will win the fabulous JVC VideoMovie.

Entries close with the last mail on Friday, October 11.
